

UNIVERSIDAD DEL SAGRADO CORAZÓN
INTERDISCIPLINARY FACULTY OF HUMANISTIC AND SOCIAL STUDIES

SYLLABUS

COURSE: Spanish as a Foreign Language: Intermediate Level

COURSE CODE: SPAN 193

PREREQUISITES: SPAN 191 or an exam certifying language level

CREDITS: Three (3) credits

DESCRIPTION:

This course aims to work with language learners as intercultural speakers. The course includes the presentation material and a learning process consisting in three phases: approaching the content, delving into it and consolidating the knowledge acquired. The intercultural speaker should be able to identify relevant aspects of the new culture which he/she/they experience through language and establish connections between his/her/their native culture and that of Puerto Rico. This course corresponds to the second stage in the process of foreign language acquisition and thus reinforces knowledge from the first stage with more complex explanations and examples that break general rules.

JUSTIFICATION:

Any learner of a foreign language should recognize the elements that make of the system of the language in question and be capable of handling typical communication scenarios that arise in social interaction. The course seeks to enable the student in three relevant aspects: transactions necessary for fulfilling personal needs, social interaction as a member of society and oral and written texts with which the student may engage according to his/her/their needs and objectives. In this course, the student will advance to the second level necessary for consolidating knowledge of a foreign language.

OBJECTIVES:

Upon finishing the course, students will possess the following:

1. Familiarity with a broad but simple repertoire of vocabulary, structures and formulas learned.
2. Ability to communicate appropriately in a neutral register, though with enough flexibility to adapt to different situations.

3. Acquisition of sufficient resources to appropriately handle social situations.
4. Sufficient vocabulary, structures, and formulas acquired, as well as a variety of linguistic functions allowing them to discuss everyday topics such as the family, work, likes and dislikes, etc.
5. They will need for the discourse to have a clear structure, and in the case of oral communication, that it be transmitted in a normal accent.
6. The ability to engage with oral and written texts on topics related to their interests, preferences and field of specialty.
7. Strategies for taking on very basic intercultural situations, rendering the communication with natives possible.
8. Consciousness of the level of control they may exert over their own learning process.

METHODOLOGY:

This course is designed in such a manner that content is integrated with in-class activities. Readings of short essays with specific difficulty levels aids morphological and syntactic explanation, such that the course is more than a mere means of acquiring information. Constant oral and written participation will facilitate the initial diagnosis of each students' level and the measurement of individual progress. Daily activities include dialogues, oral presentation and writing. Thus, students incorporate acquisition of vocabulary, grammar, pronunciation and spelling in a foreign language learning process that will prepare them to adapt to their environment socially and culturally.

The number of students never exceeds ten, as this course requires ongoing, individualized attention.

EVALUATION:

Exams, short tests, oral activities                    100%

TEXTS:

The text used in this course will be a module designed by the instructor with attention to students' specific needs.
